

Washington, D.C. – U.S. Rep. Tom Rooney (FL-16) today announced the winner of a Facebook contest to name the jobs bill he will unveil to local job creators tomorrow. The Rooney plan, which will help create an environment where the private sector can grow and hire new workers, will be called the “Restore America Act.”

“This bill is the result of months of listening to my constituents and hearing about the challenges local businesses face as they try to grow and create good jobs,” said Rooney. “Who better to name this plan than the people in my district who inspired it?”

Tomorrow, Congressman Rooney will host a panel of local job creators to present his new plan and to receive their feedback. The Rooney bill will include significant business tax reform, the elimination of excessive federal regulations, and increased American energy production.

“Costly mandates, an unfair tax code, and high energy costs are making it increasingly difficult for our businesses to compete in the global economy and create good jobs for American workers. I’m looking forward to meeting with some of the job creators in my district to listen to their ideas, hear about the impediments to business growth that they’re facing, and discuss my new jobs bill with them.”
